TEDDY ON THE BLOCKS

A game for small groups of children

Resources

Create a barrier (for example, an open box with one side cut off) to hide the actions of one player from those trying to follow the clues; a tiny teddy and at least three blocks for each group.

How to play

Player 1 places the blocks in a line with spaces between them. The teddy is then positioned on top, in front of, behind or between the blocks. Player 1 gives clues such as those below. Time is allowed for the other players to match the instructions for each clue.

"I have set the blocks in a line so they go red, blue, green."

"My teddy is not on top of a block. It is not in front of the blocks. It is between two blocks."

"It is not between the red and the blue block. Where is my teddy?"

When the other players have an answer, the barrier is removed and they look to see if they followed the clues correctly.

The clues can be as simple or as complex as needed to match the development of the players.

Variation 1

The game can also be played like the flip games in the mental routines, in which case the players behind the barrier ask questions to locate the teddy.

Variation 2

Player 1 makes a model tower or building and gives instructions for the other players to create the identical model. In the first instance, limit the number of blocks to four, but extend this as the children get better at giving and following clues.
